McBroken: Black People Won’t Clean the Ice Cream Machines At McDonald’s

There is nothing in a diverse society that White people will not be blamed for. It’s a zero sum, losing game for us. Recently, a report revealed that McDonald’s ice cream machines are more likely to be broken or unusable in certain neighborhoods. Edward Ongweso Jr on twitter summarizes:

> After a programmer made McBroken—a site tracking every broken McDonalds ice cream machine—a few people use spatial equity tools to analyze the data. They found broken machines were over represented in low-income, Black, and Latinx neighborhoods. Some people said the ice cream machines aren’t actually broken but being cleaned and thus inoperable. That’s true of some of them—the number of broken machines fluctuates thru the day—but doesn’t explain the inequity in where broken machines are reported.

Yeah, what might explain that inequity? Whitey’s racism no doubt, even though fast food eating is a huge commodity for non-Whites as anyone who’s ever been to one knows. I remember going to McDonald’s in rural areas or all White suburbs. The food was no better, because it is a franchise after all, but the cleanliness of the place was no competition to franchises in the diverse city. But really, the reason shit breaks is because blacks are too lazy to clean it. Laziness correlates with low IQ, but is also correlates with race. To save restaurant equipment, which literally never breaks by the way, we need to save the White race from diversity.
